Finding the right balance for punishing, treating drug offenders

Minnesota law keeps some out of prison, but gets tougher on dealers

by Minnesota Rep. Tony Cornish (rep.tony.cornish@houuse.mn)

Minnesota lawmakers faced an unusual situation this session, watching as new drug-sentencing guidelines were set to become law even though the Legislature had nothing to do with their crafting.

In 1978, the House and Senate agreed to code some of their lawmaker power to the Minnesota Sentencing Guidelines Commission. Under this agreement, commission appointees can make recommendations regarding criminal sentencing and, unless the full Legislature changes those guidelines or rejects them completely, they become law on Aug. 1 of that year.

Facing a nearly 500-bed shortage in our prisons, and feeling the itch to reform state laws relating to illegal drug sales and usage, the commission issued a series of new drug-sentencing guidelines.

In my opinion, its proposals were far too lenient — especially for first-degree and first-time drug offenders. Many agreed, as the law enforcement, county attorney and victim representatives on the panel voted “no” on the recommendations. But they were outnumbered. So the plan was controversial from the start.

Drug-law reform has broad support

To me it appeared the commission was attempting to keep people out of prison in order to save the state money, which is the wrong reason to change criminal sentences. Yet there was support not only within both parties of the Minnesota legislature, but also among county attorneys, law enforcement agencies and citizen advocacy groups, to reform how our state addresses drug crimes.

With that in mind, we all chose to hammer out an agreement we could live with before our legislative session ended — and before the commission’s recommendations became law.

During the weeks of negotiations, tempers flared, arguments were plentiful, and people left the room in anger. But the overwhelming goal was to make prison sentences tougher for drug dealers while providing treatment and feeling the itch to reform state laws relating to illegal drug sales and usage, the commission issued a series of new drug-sentencing guidelines.

In my opinion, its proposals were far too lenient — especially for first-degree and first-time drug offenders. Many agreed, as the law enforcement, county attorney and victim representatives on the panel voted “no” on the recommendations. But they were outnumbered. So the plan was controversial from the start.

During the weeks of negotiations, tempers flared, arguments were plentiful, and people left the room in anger. But the overwhelming goal was to make prison sentences tougher for drug dealers while providing treatment and feeling the itch to reform state laws relating to illegal drug sales and usage, the commission issued a series of new drug-sentencing guidelines.

In my opinion, its proposals were far too lenient — especially for first-degree and first-time drug offenders. Many agreed, as the law enforcement, county attorney and victim representatives on the panel voted “no” on the recommendations. But they were outnumbered. So the plan was controversial from the start.

In my opinion, its proposals were far too lenient — especially for first-degree and first-time drug offenders. Many agreed, as the law enforcement, county attorney and victim representatives on the panel voted “no” on the recommendations. But they were outnumbered. So the plan was controversial from the start.

Minnesota’s sentencing guidelines for sale, possession of drugs

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Criminal charge</th>
<th>Current sentencing guidelines, as of Aug. 1</th>
<th>Previous sentencing guidelines</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>First-degree sale*</td>
<td>65 months in prison (for sale of 17 grams or the sale of 10 grams with a firearm or two other “factors”)</td>
<td>86 months in prison (for sale of 10 grams)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>First-degree possession*</td>
<td>65 months in prison (for possession of 50 grams, or 25 grams with firearm or two other “factors”)</td>
<td>86 months in prison (for possession of 25 grams)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Second-degree sale*</td>
<td>48 months of probation (for sale of 10 grams, or 3 grams with firearm or three other “factors”)</td>
<td>48 months in prison (for possession of 3 grams)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Second-degree possession*</td>
<td>48 months of probation (for possession of 25 grams, or 6 grams with firearm or three other “factors”)</td>
<td>48 months in prison (for possession of 6 grams)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>First-degree marijuana sale</td>
<td>65 months in prison (for sale of 25 kilograms)</td>
<td>86 months in prison (for sale of 25 kilograms)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>First-degree marijuana possession</td>
<td>65 months in prison (for possession of 50 kilograms or 500 plants)</td>
<td>86 months in prison (for possession of 100 kilograms)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Second-degree marijuana sale</td>
<td>48 months of probation (for sale of 10 kilograms)</td>
<td>48 months in prison (for sale of 25 kilograms)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Second-degree marijuana possession</td>
<td>48 months of probation (for possession of 25 kilograms or 100 plants)</td>
<td>48 months in prison (for possession of 50 kilograms)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

* First- and second-degree sale and possession weights apply to cocaine and methamphetamine; sentences for those criminal charges apply to cocaine, methamphetamine and heroin.
 “Factors” refers to aggravating factors such as selling over state or national lines, making three or more sales, selling to benefit a gang, or the defendant being in a high position in a drug distribution hierarchy.

Source: Minneapolis Star-Tribune, St. Paul Pioneer Press

To me it appeared the commission was attempting to keep people out of prison to save the state money, which is the wrong reason to change criminal sentences.

Minnesota has now implemented the first major changes to our drug-sentencing guidelines in nearly three decades. Nearly every group that participated in the creation of these new guidelines left the table dissatisfied. And that is probably a good thing, because that’s usually the sign of an effective compromise.

Doing nothing was not an option, as allowing a state commission’s recommendations to become law would have been extremely problematic. Our solution wasn’t the perfect answer, but it was an answer — and a good first step toward addressing drug crimes in Minnesota as well as our prison overcrowding problem.

Rep. Tony Cornish, a Republican from Vernon Center, was first elected to the Minnesota House of Representatives in 2002.

Submissions welcome

This page is designed to be a forum for legislators and constitutional officers. The opinions expressed on this page do not reflect those of The Council of State Governments or the Midwestern Legislative Conference. Responses to any FirstPerson article are welcome, as are pieces written on other topics. For more information, contact Tim Anderson at 630.925.1922 or tanderson@csg.org.